Just Say Something strives to bring awareness to some issues that have taken over our community, state, and country, such as the opioid and e-cigarette use epidemics. Substance use and addiction do not discriminate and we want to continue to empower youth, parents, and the community to have open and honest conversations about their detrimental and, sometimes, deadly consequences.

The youth and families served by Just Say Something will be the beneficiaries of the tournament proceeds, enabling the organization to educate, prevent, and support them in navigating a culture in which drugs are an everyday way of life for many. The programs and services provided help youth and families make good decisions every day so that they may reach their potential and thrive.
